THE FOLLOWING OBSERVATIONS
Were made by Mr. RANDOLPH, on Saturday last, introductory to his resolution for repealing the non-intercourse law:

NON-INTERCOURSE.

Immediately after the decision of this question--

Mr. Randolph rose. He said that seldom had a question excited so much sensation which was of intrinsically less importance than that just now decided--and perhaps it might be deemed that the proposition which he was now about to offer was not of itself deserving of higher consideration. He said he would state his ideas as succinctly as possible, because his present object was dispatch. We have, said he, an act subsisting, which for brevity's sake I will call the non-intercourse law. This act has been reprobated and reviled by every man of every political description in this house and out of it, from one end of the continent to the other--and yet, sir, strange as it may appear, Congress has been in session near five months, and this law in relation to which every one seems to concur (indeed vie with each other) in its reprobation, still remains upon our statute books. To answer what end, I beseech you, sir? Is it a sort of scare crow, set up to frighten the great belligerents of Europe--or is it a toy, a rattle, a bare play thing to amuse the great children in our political world? On whatsoever measures the nation may ultimately resolve, be it peace, be it war, be it (if there be such a thing) an intermediate state between these two, there is no difference of opinion as to the deleterious operation of this unfortunate law--I ought perhaps to call it fortunate; for, although it was introduced into the house without a single friend, although no man was found to lift up his voice in its defence, it actually passed by a majority of two to one, and is found nearly as difficult to repeal as the old sedition law of the former majority, even after all its abettors have become convinced of its mischievous tendency. I hope, sir, that we shall profit of former experience, and not pertinaciously adhere to a measure, which is daily diminishing the resources of the nation, and very justly impairing the public confidence in the wisdom and patriotism of the legislature--but I beg pardon--I am entering into a discussion, when my sole object is to submit a naked proposition to the House, and, if possible, to get the most speedy decision on it. I do not mean to reiterate--because they must present themselves to every man of common observation and common sense--the arguments by which the propriety of a speedy decision of this question is enforced. If any member of the House will figure to himself the fair and bona fide American merchant, whose ship has been lying at the wharf the greater part of the winter, laden with a cargo perishable in its nature--say flax-seed--which if not exported now becomes utterly worthless, he will conceive the situation of those whom I wish to relieve. How our resources are to be enlarged, or the belligerents to be acted on by our produce perishing here I cannot conceive--I mean the produce of the fair and bona fide traders for the other description of men will send their produce when and where they please. We have had official information, near five months ago, that the law is wholly inoperative, except as to men of high character for probity and honor, who cannot gain their own consent to violate the law.--I therefore move

"That the act interdicting the commercial intercourse, &c. ought to be immediately repealed."

From the New York Evening Post.

The Hundred Thousand Conscripts.--Will the people of the United States believe in the monstrous doctrine of the power of Congress to legislate for a foreign territory, so as to call forth the militia for executing a plan of foreign conquest?

Do the true interests of the people require a conscription of an hundred thousand military men who may be ordered out of the United States to attack the territories of foreign powers?

In case of being in actual service for nine months, computed from the arrival at the rendezvous, how much of a year will be left for any benefit of the conscripts, after deducting the time consumed in marching out and home?

If they should be ordered to the Delta of the Mississippi, where some of the new continental regiments were placed in 1809, what proportions of the conscripts would probably be able to reach their homes when discharged notwithstanding the weakness of sickly frames? And how many of them would be left to consolidate the soil, or to feed the animals and birds of prey within the territory of Orleans?

Will the governors of states think it a good thing for themselves to be occupied as recruiting officers for the conscription service? However, if they should act as recruiting officers according to the new project of conscription, the governors may have the satisfaction of taking the engagements of commissioned officers, so as to recruit in no common style. Whatever eminence of absurdity there may be, there is novelty also in the project, for having commissioned officers recruited by means of their own written engagements, so as to metamorphose an officer of militia into a continental officer for foreign service.

In an army of an hundred thousand conscripts, where every non-commissioned officer and man is to have his musket or musical instrument--will the riflemen be pleased with carrying muskets?--and how are the artilleryists to be occupied?--must the cavalry appear with muskets sticking up in the air, and having the bayonets soldered to barrels made thin and weak near the muzzle according to the Dearborn plan? Perhaps there might be furnished from the manufactory at Springfield, enough of the sort for all the cavalry of the conscription, unless there should be some objection with respect to such of the bayonets as have been put on with soft solder.

Were the palatine doers of patch-work forgetful or ignorant of the use for riflemen or artillery or cavalry in an army of an hundred thousand?

Intermingled with absurdities, observe the insulting pressure against the main body of militia, who may remain usefully occupied and ready for defence at home? Is there a project at once to oppress, to degrade, and to ensnare? Look at the dispersion of muskets and accoutrements on account of conscripts engaged for foreign service! How many conscription encampments are to be formed "either by regiments, battalions or companies?" If it be all an affair of political gasconade, so vexatious to our own country, and contemptible to foreign powers, what does the whole deserve? There are to be arsenals and armourers for the various encampments! Mark the dissipation throughout the whole! The patronage of new appointments and compensations! The appropriation of a million of dollars for camp expences and conscription items!

Who but swaggers about economy and bunglers in legislation, would have the assurance to propose the doing of such things so stupidly and so wastefully, although a message from the INCUMBENTS OF THE PALACE has stated the power of borrowing money enough?

The conscription bill was passed by a majority in the House of Representatives, at Washington, on Tuesday the 20th March, 1810, and has a title placed at its head, as if it were only to authorise a detachment of militia according to the constitution. The duties called the Mediterranean Fund are also continued by an act, having a title as it were for protecting the commerce and seamen of the United States, in the Mediterranean!

NAVAL ENGAGEMENT.

Extract of a letter from captain Benjamin Holbrook to the editors of the Freeman's Journal, dated Havana, March 2, 1810.

"Feb. 14, in lat. 17, 51, N. Cape Tiburon bearing N. E. of us, saw two sail to windward. The headmost much the largest--continually firing her stern chasers at the other, which appeared to be in close pursuit of her. At 10, A. M. passed close by the stump of a mast, which had been burnt to the water's edge. It appeared from the size to have belonged to a vessel of between two and three hundred tons. It has not been long in the water, as there were no barnacles on it. Feb. 15, at 1, P. M. (light breezes) the pursued ship bore away and stood direct for us; the other in chase. At 3, a brig hove in sight, appeared to be in chase also. At half past 3, the headmost ship hauled to wind, shortened sail, and prepared to engage--hoisted French colors--the others (a ship and brig) hoisted English colors--the brig the red, and the ship the blue flag. The English on coming up with the Frenchman bore away on him, and at 4 commenced a very severe and close engagement. The two ships were engaged an hour before the brig could be brought into action. The Frenchman succeeded in disabling the British ship, having shot away all her head stays, her halyards and sheets. The sails were much damaged, being sometimes before, at other times in the wind steering her by the sails. At one time we could not discern any colors on board the Frenchman; at which period she did not fire a gun. On the smoke clearing away, discovered the English ship with her mizen top-sail to the mast dropping astern of the Frenchman, who then boarded his main tack, hoisted his flying jib, colors flying, considerably ahead of the English ship, and wore round on the other tack, steering before the wind, until having got out of reach of the English ship, who continued firing, standing on the other tack in the above disabled state; but either could not, or did not attempt to pursue her.

"After having got out of gun shot of the ship, the Frenchman hauled his wind for the passage, the island of Navassa being in sight, bearing W. N. of us, the Frenchman being distant from us about 8 miles. The brig continued the engagement alone for half an hour, had her colors shot away, hoisted others to the mainmast cross trees, and continued fighting under them, but was finally obliged to give over the engagement, and wore round on the other tack. In crossing each other neither the Englishman nor Frenchman fired; but seemed to have parted by mutual consent. We were not molested by either. The Frenchman made the best of his way though the passage. At sunset saw the English ship with all her sails down, on the opposite tack, appeared to be refitting. The brig on getting some distance from the Frenchman hauled up his sails. The Frenchman did not appear to be much damaged either in her sails or rigging, but must have been much injured in her hull, as the Englishman fired very low and was in close action for an hour within musket shot of each other. At day light could see nothing of either English or French vessels.

"Feb. 17, lat. 18, 42, Jamaica bearing from E. S. E. to S. W. and W. fresh breezes and clear weather, saw three large ships standing towards us, which proved to be two English ships of war in chase of the same frigate, mentioned above, the English ship nearest to us hoisted her colors, and on our hoisting ours, she hauled them down again, and did not alter her course, but continued the chase: the other ship was a long way to windward of the Frenchman, and a very large vessel. As they were standing in for the land, the Frenchman would be obliged to tack, consequently would be cut off by the vessel to windward, and brought to engagement before night. At 4, P. M. lost sight of them, still standing in shore when last seen. Fresh breezes, we going at the rate of 6 knots per hour, to the west; the above named vessels steering about S. E."

NORFOLK, March 30.

Yesterday arrived here from Cadiz, the bark Fame, capt. Stone, in 67 days, leaving that place on the 22d of Jan. he brings despatches from Mr. Armstrong to the Secretary of State, the latest we believe received from France. Captain Stone landed a messenger at Dover, with despatches from Mr. Armstrong to Mr. Pickens, our minister at London. The John Adams frigate from Holland, was lying in the Downs, and would go again to France, before she returns again to this country.

Captain Stone brings no newspapers later than the last of December, but he informs that there is no truth in the intelligence received by way of London, that General Armstrong had adjusted our affairs with the French government; such a report was circulated about the beginning of January, but it was soon contradicted, by more severe measures against the American vessels, which, with their cargoes in the ports of Spain and Italy, have been sequestered.

The Fame was bound from this port to Tomingen, and was captured as was mentioned in our papers about six weeks ago. The vessel and cargo were American, and had not been boarded, nor otherwise liable to capture under the French decrees. On the arrival of the Fame at Calais, the crew were sent to prison, and the cargo taken out and deposited by the owners of the privateer, in their own stores. Captain Stone went to Paris, to obtain redress, but seeing no hope of obtaining it, or being brought to trial in any reasonable time, or if ever he was indicted to make the best terms he could, by giving up a part of the property to save the remainder, and which are the only means by which the citizens of this country can save any part of their property which falls into the hands of the French cruisers. The treatment of the Americans in France is shameful, and demands the interposition of our government. The crews are imprisoned on their arrival; by short allowance and close confinement, they are too frequently induced to enter on board of French privateers in order to get liberated. The commissary of prisoners received from twenty to thirty guineas from the owners of the privateers for each seaman discharged from prison. The consequence of this may be foreseen; the poor fellows are captured by British cruisers, when they are considered as prisoners of war, to escape from that situation they enter into the British service, and are thus lost to their friends and their country.

The ships Susan, Hatton, and Eliza, Vickery, both of this port are still detained in France, waiting trial. Captain Edwards and Lovitt of Virginia, were still in close prison, without any hope of release.

We wish the government of this country would lay before the nation Mr. Armstrong's despatches respecting the treatment of our countrymen in France, which if he has done his duty he has not failed to communicate. It is hoped, if this is not done, that some independent member of congress will move for information from the executive upon a subject so highly interesting to the interests and honor of the country.

The schooner Resolution, captain Russell from Cadiz bound to this port, went on shore on Cape Henry, on Tuesday night, and is expected will be got off without damage. Captain R. left Cadiz the 26th of Jan. when it was reported that the French army of 100,000 men were within ten leagues of Seville. The junta had been dissolved and some of its members had arrived at Cadiz, where the principal inhabitants were preparing to leave the place, upon the advance of the French army. An army of 80,000 British, Spanish and Portuguese were following the French army into Andalusia.

To be Rented for a term of years,

THAT valuable tract of Land, called Preston, situate on the Washington and Alexandria turnpike road, at the junction of our mile creek and Potomac river, and distant two miles from Alexandria, three from Washington and five from George Town. The annual average product of the apple orchard alone is estimated at 400 barrels. This tract contains about 100 acres of land, a considerable part whereof has been manured and sown with clover seed. The London Courier of Jan. 13, says—
“The American Consul, Mr. Forbes, we understand, has retired from Hamburg to the Westphalian territory, apprehending some insult or violence from the inhabitants of that city. Their indignation was excited by his having denounced four American vessels that arrived at Hamburg with American papers, but which in fact sailed from an English port. The vessels were seized and sequestered, and will no doubt be condemned. This interposition was warmly resented by the whole commercial class.”

Extract of a letter, dated Carthage, 4th February, 1810.

“This part of the world is quiet at present. The extensive city and province of Quito, which formerly made a part of the vice kingdom of Peru, but lately was joined to Ste Fe or New Grenada, endeavored to throw off the oppressive laws and regulations of Old Spain, which prohibit all fine manufactures, and even the cultivation of many articles of produce, such as oil, wine, &c. which Spain can furnish, besides a number of other oppressions and monopolies, but for want of a proper head, and not being actually joined by any of the surrounding provinces, they have been obliged for the present, to submit again to their old forms of government. The bishop in Quito had joined the people, but most of the clergy of other provinces, particularly the inquisition, who think their influence more secure under the old system, raised a cry against the Quitoians, and their brethren and fellow sufferers and marched against them. The Quitoians are the most industrious of all the inhabitants of Spanish America, and manufacture coarse wools, cottons, and linens, for exportation to other provinces. They had procured machinery for making finer goods, but their government opposed them. They have very good painters and mechanicks. Their country, though much variegated, is mostly mountainous, the soil fertile, and the climate healthy and pleasant.”

BONAPARTE'S COMMENTARY,

ON

Jefferson's Toast.

It will be recollected that at a public dinner, said to be given to the late president, at Richmond last year, he gave the “Liberty of the Seas”—wishing no doubt, to make the people believe that it was the policy of his partisans and imitators to encourage trade, after they had laid the whole imposts of the union on commerce, and annihilated our little navy. But the late decree issued at Paris by way of affording some slight relief to the impoverished French nation, and prevent a counter revolution, is the best comment on Jefferson's toast. By this decree, neutrals may be permitted, on taking out licence from his imperial majesty, the assessor of the “Liberty of the Seas,” to bring into his territories, certain naval stores, &c. especially, silver dollars, and take away in return (if they ever get away at all) wine, grain, and above all, tricolored ribbons, paste boards and cat-gut!

Who now will dispute the generosity of the great Napoleon? Bring me, says he, your solid wealth, and I will let you have, that is if you ask prettily, the refuse of my fancy shops. Come forth, you American farmers, who earn your bread by the sweat of your brow, here's a gewgaw for your little misses; only bring along with you plenty of dollars, and make a low bow!

NO DUPE.

as well as extensive in its kind that has ever been undertaken in any country. And they flatter themselves that the American will by no means shrink from a comparison with the London edition, tho' offered at six dollars per Vol. less.
This number may be considered as a fair specimen of the execution of the work, and will be left a short time for examination, before the 3d number is put to press. After this the subscription will be raised to $2 25 each number; and but a few more copies printed than are sufficient to supply the subscribers, that the early patrons of this valuable Work may have a decided advantage—subsequent applications may therefore come too late.
It is also the intention of the Editor to annex to the last number a complete list of names of the subscribers, as the patrons and encouragers of useful knowledge, the arts and literature of the United States.
Subscriptions are received by the subscriber.
